“ Sweet Pea was born in August of 2009 and passed away peacefully December 28, 2023. She was 14 and a half, the equivalent of 74 human years.

She was truly sweet. Never once did she try to bite or scratch me. She was my constant companion and comfort through the years. She even went on 3 trips to Alabama with me, although in her later years she wanted no part of traveling. She would see me get out my bag to start packing and she would get as far back under the bed as she could.

She would lay on my chest and stare into my eyes and I would stare back. There was a true love and trust between us. She would let me do anything to her, pull on her whiskers or ears or play our game where I would act like I was going to get her and she would "bark" at me. She knew I would never hurt her and I knew she would never hurt me either.

Several times in her life I almost lost her due to sickness. But I would research ways to treat her and always nurse her back to health. I was starting to do that again the week before she died. She quit eating and was losing weight so I took her to the vet. Test revealed that she had a very bad bacterial infection and her liver enzymes were not normal. The vet gave me some antibiotic and I took her home.

I couldn't get enough fluids in her with just a feeding syringe that night, so I took her back to the vet the next morning and let them care for her that day with IV fluids and nutrition. They got some food in her with the syringe and she peed. We were feeling hopeful that she would get better. They gave me a second antibiotic and an RX for some special food I could get at PetSmart. After I got her settled in on her heating pad, I went to pick up the food. But within an hour or so after I got back she was unconscious. Just before she died she managed all the strength she had and raised her head and, like she always had done, she looked straight into my eyes to let me know she loved me and knew that I loved her too. That was our goodbye and then she took her last breath and passed away.

I will never forget that little girl. I loved her so much. We both tried our best to take care of each other. She has a place beside my bed like she always did.
